

Mini Project Description of additional field

In this program, an additional field mobile number has been added to the `clientData` structure to store the customer's contact information. The mobile number is captured at the time of creating a new account and stored along with other account details in the random-access file.

The `newRecord()` function has been modified to accept the mobile number as user input while adding a new account. This ensures that each account maintains complete customer information.

Additionally, the `displayRecord()` function has been updated to display the details of all users when it is viewed. The formatted output now includes the account number, last name, first name, mobile number, and balance, providing a comprehensive view of the account details.
